Courage leaked, as sand From the best sandbags after years of rain. Spondees start and end the sonnet.What passing-bells for these who die as cattle? And truthfully wrote the Mother "Tim died smiling." 1What passing-bells for these who die as cattle?2 — Only the monstrous anger of the guns.3 Only the stuttering rifles' rapid rattle4Can patter out their hasty orisons.5No mockeries now for them; no prayers nor bells; 6 Nor any voice of mourning save the choirs,— 7The shrill, demented choirs of wailing shells;8 And bugles calling for them from sad shires.9What candles may be held to speed them all?10 Not in the hands of boys, but in their eyes!11Shall shine the holy glimmers of goodbyes.12 The pallor of girls' brows shall be their pall;13Their flowers the tenderness of patient minds,14And each slow dusk a drawing-down of blinds. This is yet another tradition to mark the loss of those who have passed on; curtains and shutters are closed to create a dark interior and to signal to the community at large that the dead are acknowledged.On the battlefield there are no such marks of respect, only the natural fading of the light as another day ends. The poet skilfully creates a kind of question and answer sonnet, the first line and the ninth line triggering a response that concludes with the eighth and fourteenth lines.And bugles calling for them from sad shires.And each slow dusk a drawing-down of blinds.More AnalysisLines 9 -14 The ninth line, the start of the sestet, is the second question, again relating improper death on the battlefield to that of proper ceremonial death in church at the funeral. Yet they were vile. Andrew has a keen interest in all aspects of poetry and writes extensively on the subject. And bugles calling for them from sad shires. Brothers—would send his favourite cigarette, Each week, month after month, they wrote the same, Thinking him sheltered in some Y. Against the fires that would not burn him whole But kept him for death's perjury and scoff And life's half-promising, and both their riling. Hut, Where once an hour a bullet missed its aim And misses teased the hunger of his brain. In fact, the opening octet has varied rhythms running through. "Death sooner than dishonor, that's the style!" So Father said. We could do nothing, but wipe his bleeding cough. Note the alliteration in line eleven which helps the reader focus on this most sensitive image. His poems are published online and in print.Wilfred OwenAnthem For Doomed Youth is a war poem Owen wrote whilst recovering from shell-shock in a Scottish hospital. Patting goodbye, doubtless they told the lad He'd always show the Hun a brave man's face; Father would sooner him dead than in disgrace,— Was proud to see him going, aye, and glad. How come we are blind to the inhumanity of war? So what seems like the regular marching iambic beat is somewhat broken up from time to time, mirroring the reality of the unpredictable battlefield. "I will to the King, And offer him consolation in his trouble. For that man there has set his teeth to die, And being one that hates obedience, Discipline, and orderliness of life, I cannot mourn him." W. Note also the onomatopoeia and alliteration present in line three, stuttering rifles' rapid rattle, enjambment helping keep the sense of speed and energy on into line four.The verb to patter out means to speak rapidly and noisily; so the rifles firing so loudly and quickly smother the orisons (the prayers) of the men. No. (Later they found the English ball.) It was the reasoned crisis of his soul. It is traditionally the form used for romance and love (as with Shakespeare for example) but has been experimented with over the years.Wilfred Owen wrote several drafts of this sonnet before finally choosing this version with a rhyme scheme of ababccddeffegg, most end rhymes being full-cattle/rattle, bells/shells, choirs/shires, all/pall, eyes/goodbyes, minds/blinds.With one slant rhyme (or near rhyme) with guns/orisons.Internal near rhymes bring texture and interest and help connect the lines. The poet again uses alliteration - dusk a drawing-down - to conclude this memorable comparison.SourcesThe Poetry Handbook, John Lennard, OUP, 2005www.poetryfoundation.orgwww.hup.harvard.eduwww.poets.org © 2017 Andrew Spacey What passing-bells for these who die as cattle? B. The eighth line therefore suggests that, as the men die, the bugle calls are all they will hear, reminding them of home and the grief that their deaths will cause.Contrast this scenario played out in the first octave with the sestet's theme of religious ritual and funeral gatherings. Yeats. Perhaps his Mother whimpered how she'd fret Until he got a nice, safe wound to nurse. Candles are symbols of hope and respect and are often lit in memory of those who have passed on, helping them speedily on their journey to a possible afterlife.But these candles won't be held by innocent boys, the flames will be reflected in the eyes of those doomed to die in war. But never leave, wound, fever, trench-foot, shock, Untrapped the wretch. Owen is also being controversial by focusing on the negative aspects of war, which some see as disrespect for the soldiers, who give their all for the cause.Owen doesn't back away from the deaths of the young men; he relates it to the mass slaughter of animals.The poem throughout compares the deaths of the soldiers with traditional funeral rites and ceremonies.Other critics think that the poem is extra powerful because it raises the important questions often ignored when countries commit to war - Why should so many die in such a hideous way? He personally experienced these very bloody scenes, fighting on whilst his men were blasted.Home comforts must have seemed a world away and the thought that these men were being killed on such a scale, in such a manner, would have had a gut wrenching effect on the young poet.The bugle is the musical instrument used by a lone bugler to play The Last Post and Reveille at military funerals and ceremonies, both evocative tunes. And there will be no funeral or decent burial for most of the dead. The pale skin of girls' brows will metaphorically become the pall - the cloth that covers the coffin - and the flowers, traditionally placed at the graveside and around the church, will symbolise the contemplative, beautiful thoughts of the mourners.The final image is that of blinds being drawn in respect of the dead. The poets use of the letter t in lines 3 and 4 is noticeable - stuttering/rattle/patter/out creates a staccato effect and together with short vowels produces quickfire lines of mostly iambs.Lines 5 - 8 No mockeries...any religious ritual for these soldiers, dying in the mud and stench of the battlefield, would undermine their deaths, would be an insult to their name. Sisters would wish girls too could shoot, charge, curse, . The guns are angry, shells wail and bugles call. This time, Death had not missed. The poem's success lies in the stark contrast between the furious, explosive reality of the battle and the calm holiness of the church ritual.Anthem For Doomed YouthAnthem For Doomed YouthAnalysis of Anthem For Doomed YouthAnthem For Doomed Youth is a sonnet made up of eight plus six lines, fourteen, an octet and sestet. Less than a year later Owen was killed in battle.The sonnet form is usually associated with romance and love so the poet is being ironic by choosing it. Formal rhymes bring order to what is the potentially chaotic situation of the battle raging.Anthem For Doomed Youth - Further Line By Line AnalysisLines 1 - 4Wilfred Owen knew from deep personal experience just what war meant for many of his fellow troops who were killed by their thousands in the trench warfare of the First World war.He was inspired to write poems like Anthem For Doomed Youth because he saw first hand the madness of mass killing and likened it to the slaughter of animals such as cattle.This implied metaphor hints at the act of butchery, with its associated blood and guts and detachment. These tend to slow down the reading. Could it be accident?—Rifles go off . With him they buried the muzzle his teeth had kissed. . And death seemed still withheld for torture of lying machinally shelled, At the pleasure of his world's Powers who'd run amok. The year was 1917. There's no doubt that Anthem For Doomed Youth explores the darker side of war, aspects that some would rather ignore or gloss over. The alliterative No/now/no/nor reinforces the idea that the only voices they will hear will not be human but those of military hardware, the shells that make a hideous wailing sound as they fly in.Owen's use of shrill and demented add to the extreme madness of the battleground as the artillery pound on with their relentless guns. They were never going to hear any passing-bells - their deaths meant nothing.Personification plays a serious role in this opening section. His eyes grew old with wincing, and his hand Reckless with ague. Note monstrous/mockeries/mourning and passing/patter/pallor/patient and out/nw/brows/flowers - the accumulative effect when reading this poem out loud has a quiet but profound resonance.The steady beat of iambic pentameter governs the second part of the sonnet but the octet has varied rhythms running through, with spondees and trochees featuring. One dawn, our wire patrol Carried him. M. He'd seen men shoot their hands, on night patrol, Their people never knew. Not sniped?
